

Editorial

*Move like the sable swan
On the luminous expanse;
In sight out of range
Of barking ignorance.
- James McAuley*

Dear Friends,

Happy New Year!

Here comes a warm wish from our editorial team to cheer, motivate and stir to action in the days ahead!

Time, the all-powerful mechanism of the Creator, effects subtle changes, invisibly visible variations, soft and smooth shifts in Natural phenomena, imperceptibly perceptible upward mobility in life, vocation and the world around.

This New Year augers well for all of us, as our aspirations amble gently, endeavours unfold enticingly like the blossoms speaking in silken voices.

This also enables us to ponder for a while what exactly we need and what is needed to be done so as to cruise comfortably in the days to come, lifting benchmarks to reach the desired goals delightfully.

Our journal was started in order to give a platform for teachers to share their views and experiences in their study and teaching of literature and it is a matter of gratification we have succeeded fairly well in realizing our objective. This is evident from the fact that we get every month quite a large number of papers for publication. We have generally been obliging them. As our readers are aware, we are now entering the third year of the publication of our Journal and it is now time to effect an improvement in the quality of its content. We request those who submit papers for publication to ensure there is no plagiarism and also they strictly adhere to the requirements of research papers. It is necessary since we intend to make our Journal soon a peer-reviewed one.

This issue presents interesting, inspiring papers on diverse themes as always. Please, do get back with your invaluable impressions to help us serve you better.

Wishing you all a bright and fulfilling year of scholarly excellence, exchange of erudite views and progress in career!

Happy Reading!

Dr T. Sai Chandra Mouli

Editor, JTREL

Former Professor of English,

Railway college,

Osmania University, Secunderabad